Enthusiasm, gaiety and pride mark DECTown Family Day

On Sunday, August 28, all roads pointed to DECTown, a magical city built by Digital in the Hynes Auditorium in Boston. Employees and families came from Westfield, from Maynard, from Marlboro — from most every location in Massachusetts and New Hampshire — to see products displayed the way customers would typically use them. DECTown had been built to showcase products for the sales force as part of a worldwide Sales-Marketing Symposium.

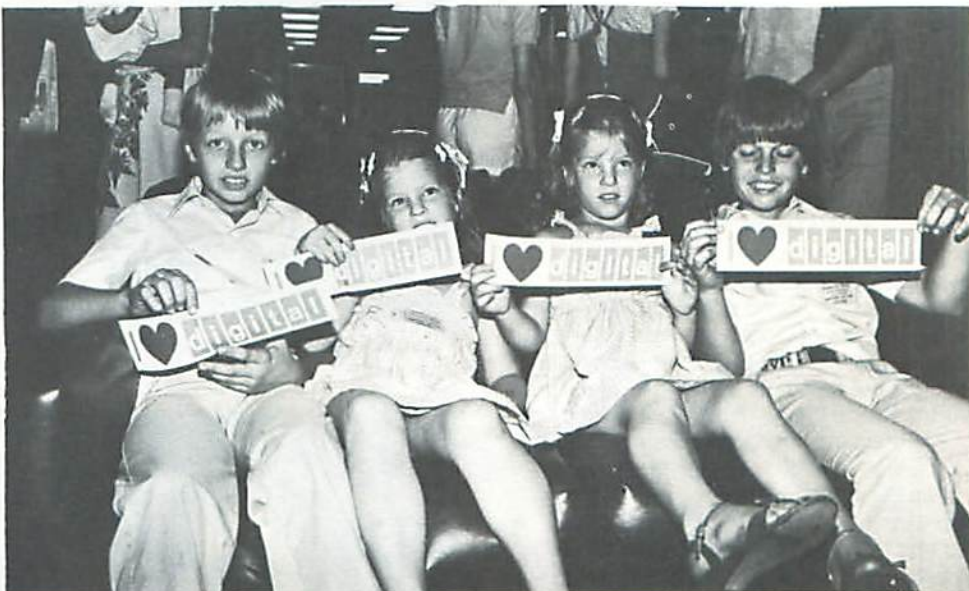

In his welcome, Ken Olsen, president, thanked employees for their contribution to Digital's success. "We are criticized for not going into different areas, but our strategy has been to only go into important areas where we can excel and make a significant contribution." He said that Digital is on a path to continued success and praised employees as the most valued resource of the company. He encouraged people to touch, see and learn directly from the exhibits.

DECTown spread over 60,000 square feet with its own factory, hospital, computer store and practically every business found in a metropolis. Throughout the Hynes, urban touches like street signs, lamposts, a post office, a cafe and entertainment kept the mood alive. Scattered throughout DECTown were close to 200 different Digital computer systems, set up to display the wide range of applications currently being used by customers. Another 300 personal computers were set up in various exhibits to allow DECTown visitors to experience them first-hand.

Some 1,000 employees had spent long hours during the last two weeks setting up the exhibits which opened August 22 for the sales force and closed August 31 with customers and the investment community.

More than 10,000 visitors from toddlers to retirees wandered the streets of DECTown on that Sunday. Members of the video-game generation, no strangers to terminals, were found at every hands-on exhibit. In the auditorium area, the DECBIGBAND and Jack d'Johns offered some musical diversion. During the day, seven employees had their names drawn for complete Rainbow 100 systems.

At DECTown, everyone worked hard to simulate user environments. Mary Ellen Hoesly and Michael McLean of Palette Corporation demo a computer aided manufacturing design program.

was possible to pick one) was IVIS, Digital's Interactive Video Information System with a picture clearer than a television set. The Terminals Rooms were continually busy with games running on the Rainbow, Professional and DECmate. Another favorite was DECTalk, a speech synthesis product that can translate computer memos, letters and reports to speech.

Employees responded with enthusiasm. Nora Boyle, a systems analyst for Field Service MIS in Parker Street brought her nine and ten year-old sons. "I was pleasantly surprised at how thoroughly they enjoyed themselves. Now, they have a tangible sense of where their mother works. I think it's a healthy gesture on the company's part," Nora said.

For Kevin Driscoll, from VAX Workstations Marketing operations in Marlboro, it was as time to show his family what he does. "It was like bringing them to see a VAXstation installation. The booths, entertainment and refreshments were all well done and appreciated," he said.

"I felt like part of the Digital family," said Marie Wachler of Corporate Health Services. "I am proud to be part of Digital. My family appreciated the complexity of the programs and the time put into the exhibits. My husband even took a Family Day program to give to his boss," Marie said.

"My family was impressed that Digital would spend so much money on employees and the sales force to let them know about products," said Mary Colwill, an Engineering Technical support supervisor for the Medical Systems Group. "My husband works for a company that is not people oriented and was impressed at how the speakers recognized and lauded employees' efforts. It made me feel great and proud of the company," Mary said.

Entire Sales force gathers in Boston Symposium Demonstrates unity and strength

Digital's strength and exhilaration was evident as the entire multi-thousand Digital sales force stood side-by-side on the UMass Campus during the Sales Symposium. "This is our first worldwide marketing and sales symposium," said Ken Olsen, president. "In fact, this is one of the biggest sales meeting the world has ever seen. That's because we've got the biggest message to tell in the world. We are impressed and enthusiastic about the products we have to sell."

The Sales Symposium was the single largest sales meeting ever held by the company and the first time since 1968 that the entire international sales force has gathered in one place. The week of activities began August 22 and were divided into two consecutive meetings of three days each. Between the two meetings the entire sales force met for a gala event held on the UMass Campus.

DECTown, a city inaugurated at the Hynes Auditorium to showcase products, featured typical customer environments that incorporated a variety of Digital products working together. It demonstrated the compatibility of Digital's equipment and applications, and the variety of environments in which Digital's products can enhance productivity.

The meeting's theme "Under Full Sail" and its logo — a yacht racing ahead at full speed — conveyed the message that Digital's personnel and products work together in harmony to move forward.

This account-oriented approach reflects recent changes in the way the sales force operates — meeting the total needs of the customer with Digital's full set of unified products.

The sales force heard the messages of all the major marketing groups and got detailed information on products and programs pertinent to their specific areas of interest and responsibility. They left the meeting confident that the company can fill the computing needs of any organization. They also had a chance to meet with "any army of technical experts" available to help them close sales. For reactions from the sales force see page 10.

Following the sales meetings, DECTown was opened for employees and their families on August 28 and for the press, customers, consultants and the investment community from August 29 to 31.

Ken Olsen and Ed Kramer, vice president, Marketing, begin a tour of DECTown with a stop at VAX-stations.

The sheer size of the sales force is evident as the first meeting convenes.

Demonstrating the "warm blanket" approach to non-technical customers, Bob Huges, Business and Office Systems manager, promised a blanket to each sales rep who sells an office system.

THE MARKETPLACE

How "The Marketplace" works...

"The Marketplace" is a free service provided by Digital This Week for Digital employees in Massachusetts facilities. To service as many employees as possible and to keep the ads timely, DTW needs your cooperation.

Please submit one ad at a time. Multiple or duplicate ads will have to be returned. You may list more than one item in an ad if it fits on two lines with about 45 characters to a line. An ad will only be printed once. DTW reserves the right to edit for space.

Ads should be worded clearly, printed or typewritten and be in good taste. Marketplace does not print ads for services or profit making enterprises.

There are no deadlines for Marketplace submission. Ads are printed on a first-come, first-served basis as space allows. Therefore, Marketplace is not always the best vehicle if you want to sell something in a hurry. Ads cannot be taken over the phone.

When submitting an ad, please remember to include all of the following information: full name, mailstop, DTN. Only first names are printed, but we must have your full name for our records. DTW does not print home phone numbers. If you sell your item before the ad is published, please call the office to cancel the ad. We can use that space for another listing.

If you have any questions, please call the Marketplace office at DTN 251-1308.

How to survive the adolescent years

Adolescence (ages 12-19) is usually a stressful time for all families, especially dual career families, single parents and step-parents. Often parents feel bewildered about how to deal with their ever changing adolescent children; their mood swings, challenge to values, authority and so on ... Some days its easier just to leave home earlier or come home later to avoid conflict with the adolescent.

Surviving the Adolescent Years is a special 5 week lunch-time seminar for parents of adolescents. Sponsored by the Maynard Employee Assistance Program, and conducted by the professional staff of Life Management Inc., of Acton, this seminar will address normal adolescence and the stress it can create on the family. Participants will receive information regarding establishing appropriate limits, affects of peer groups, use of drugs and alcohol by teens and adolescent sexuality. Each seminar group will be limited to 20.

One seminar will be conducted in the Hudson area (HLO) beginning October 4 for 5 consecutive Tuesdays and another in Maynard (MLO) beginning October 5 for 5 consecutive Wednesdays, both from 12 to 1 p.m. There is no cost for the seminar and space is limited to the first 20 registered for each location. Depending on employee response and the availability of Life Management Inc., additional seminars may be scheduled in the spring.

For more information, questions or confidential assistance, contact the Maynard Area Employee Assistance Program DTN: 223-4439.

Mill offers Health Risk Appraisal Program

In 1982 almost one out of every ten dollars spent by Americans was for health care. That's about $1,361 for every person.

As part of a national drive to keep health costs under control and to help employees become healthier, Mill Health Services is offering a Health Risk Appraisal program for Mill employees.

Individual analyses are based on answers to questions about basic health such as personal and family health history, height, weight, blood pressure and optional cholesterol level. All information is coded and then analyzed by the Department of Public Health. The information is kept confidential by Health Services.

The data is evaluated and the employee is scheduled for individual follow-up at Health Services to determine what improvement, if any, are needed to maintain a healthier lifestyle. For more information, contact Susan Marston-Burkely, R.N., Mill Health Services, DTN 223-3000.

Employees support arts in a rural setting

Ten years after its beginning, Groton Center for the Arts (GCA) continues to provide arts in a rural setting in residents of Nashoba Valley.

Over 1,700 members, many Digital employees, support this organization through dollars and volunteered time.

GCA stresses the Arts in Education. Workshops and classes in painting, drawing, photography, weaving, pottery and more are held year round. Their school of music provides individual lessons as well as concerts, recitals, and workshops.

The Indian Hill Chamber Orchestra performs a concert series each year which includes some of the finest music written for small orchestras. A full range of recreational activities are offered in many area schools.

And GCA's annual festival SEPTEMBERFEST has become an Autumn tradition. Entitled "Participation - Body and Soul," this year's event will take place Sat., Sept. 10 and Sunday, Sept. 18.

On Sept. 10 at 8 p.m. the Art Auction will be held at Lawrence Academy in Groton. A $7.50 donation will allow participants to bid on art, crafts and antique objects donated by SEPTEMBERFEST artists.

On Sunday, Sept. 18, 11 a.m. - 6 p.m., SEPTEMBERFEST's outdoor festival will provide continuous entertainment. Demonstrations by GCA students in belly dancing, karate, aerobics, and gymnastics will be performed. And the Kid's Corner will provide hands-on entertainment for the younger set. Kids under 12 and seniors will be admitted free, adults are asked to donate $1.00 in return for a GCA button.

Digital employees have been actively involved in supporting GCA through time and donations. Several hundred dollars contributed to GCA in FY83 was matched by the company through its Matching Gifts Program (brochure available in Personnel Departments).

Recently, Digital donated a DECMate 1 to GCA to assist this non-profit organization in updating membership and book-keeping tasks. One of Digital's main criteria for donation of equipment is clearly met by this organization: services provided to a range of communities where Digital employees live.
