KENNETH H. OLSEN

President

KENNETH H. OLSEN, 56, founded Digital Equipment Corporation in 1957 and has served as its President since that time. Under his direction, Digital has grown from three employees in 8,500 square feet of leased space in a corner of an old woolen mill to become the world leader in the minicomputer field with more than 68,000 employees and over 13,000,000 square feet of space in locations throughout the world.

Prior to founding Digital, Olsen was on the staff of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Digital Computer Laboratory for seven years. His activities there included serving as leader of the section of MIT Lincoln Laboratory which designed and built the MTC computer used in the SAGE Air Defense Computer design program and supervised the building of the high performance, transistorized digital computers, the TX-0 and TX-2, which set the standard of comparison for transistor circuit performance.

A native of Stratford, Connecticut, Olsen earned his B.S. and M.S. degrees in Electrical Engineering from Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He is a Director of the Shawmut Corporation, Boston, Mass.; a member of the Board of Directors of Polaroid Corporation and Ford Motor Company; the Corporation of MIT, Cambridge, Mass.; Board of Trustees, Gordon College, Wenham, Mass., and of the Corporation of Wentworth Institute, Boston, Mass.

Olsen is also a member of the Corporation and Advisory Vice President of the Joslin Diabetes Foundation, Inc., Boston, Mass.; a member of the Corporation of the Museum of Science, Boston, Mass., and a deacon of Park Street Church, Boston, Mass.

He has served on the Computer Science and Engineering Board of the National Academy of Sciences, Washington, D.C., and the President's Science Advisory Committee.

A World War II U.N. Navy veteran, Olsen is a fellow of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineering, Inc., and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Boston, Mass.; and is a member of the National Academy of Engineering.

He was named "Young Electrical Engineer of the Year" in 1960 by Eta Kappa NU, the electrical engineering honorary fraternity and "Businessman of the Year" in 1970 by Bay State Business World. Olsen was designated "Executive of the Year" in 1970 by the Society for the Advancement of Management, Boston Chapter, and was the first person to receive the "President's Award" presented by the New England Chapter of the Electronic Representatives Association. He also received the "New Englander of the Year" award from the New England Council in 1977. In 1978, Olsen was elected to the "Entrepreneurial Hall of Fame" of Babson College and received the Business/Statesman Award from Columbia Business School Club of Boston. He is also the 1980 recipient of the Franklin Institute's Vermilye Medal.

on your

Anniversary*

The Board of Directors and all of our staff at the Will Dodd Community Center extend our sincere wishes for continued success, along with our heartfelt appreciation for all the help and cooperation you and Digital Equipment Corporation has given us over the years.

Digital Corporate History

Digital Equipment Corporation was founded in 1957 at a time when the idea of using risk capital to start a company was still strange. A number of companies that had been started during the recently ended Korean War were in trouble and a recession was beginning. Looking back, 1957 turns out to have been a good time to start a company, although it didn't seem so then.

Three of us had been making high-speed transistor computers at MIT, but our work wasn't thought to be terribly useful because, after all, we were just academics. We felt what we were doing was important and we felt we had to show the world that our computers were practical, inexpensive and reliable. And so we started a company, using $70,000 borrowed from American Research and Development, a Boston venture capital firm.

This doesn't sound like much money today, and it probably wasn't then, either. But having only $70,000 to work with had its advantages: we had so few dollars that we were able to watch every one of them carefully. We used some of it to lease 8,500 square feet of space on the second floor of building 12 in the mill, above a furniture store.

In those early days, we did everything ourselves. We silk-screened our printed circuit boards with real silk on wooden frames and etched them in aquarium tanks; we did our own photography and made our own tools; we swept the floors. Doing all these things ourselves was difficult, but worth doing.

As a company, we were very small but we had a formal accounting system from which we learned most of the aspects of accounting. We were also learning a lot about purchasing, personnel and facilities management.

When we started Digital Equipment Corporation we had some very unusual ideas, so unusual that we stopped trying to explain them. Now, they are rather obvious.

We said then that we didn't want government funding for our research. This was thought to be strange, because at the time it appeared the government would finance all produce development. Nonetheless, we wanted to use our own money to develop our own proprietary products because of the disciplines to be learned from the do-it-yourself approach.

Our second strange idea had to do with profit: we said we wanted to make some. This was an unusual idea for this time because "profit" was considered a bad word. And besides, you didn't have to make profit to be successful. All you had to do was "grow."

People also looked askance at us in those days because we said growth was not our goal. Instead, our goal was, and still is, to do a good job well, knowing that if we achieve this goal, growth would come naturally.

When we borrowed our original $70,000 from AR&D we promised to make a profit in our first year...and we did. It was modest, but it was a profit. We were feeling very proud when we reported back to AR&D on our first 12 months of operation.

however, our pride quickly turned to dismay when General Georges Doriot, who was then president of AR&D and is now one of Digital's Directors, frowned at our modest success and expressed his disappointment. He explained that no one had survived in business who succeeded this fast. Perhaps it was the challenge of General Doriot's statement that has allowed us to survive til now.

We have tried to apply those important lessons we learned at the beginning. We have organized Digital into a number of pieces, each having a feeling of autonomy, entrepreneurship and responsibility to its customers. And we think this has worked well, although sometimes these pieces get the feeling that they are not allowed to grow as fast as the market would allow. In fact, this feeling of entrepreneurship has been instilled so thoroughly that my role for the last several years has largely been to limit the drive to grow of these various pieces of the organization to ensure that our total corporate plan is realistic and conservative. As a result of the spreading of this entrepreneurial spirit throughout the total organization, Digital has grown to 68,000 persons with sales of almost $4 billion.

Cabling America

At the end of 1982, an estimated 28 million American residences - one out of three - were wired for cable television. New connections in 1983 are currently running at the rate of about 300,000 per month and, by 1990, more than 75% of America's households should be wired for cable television.

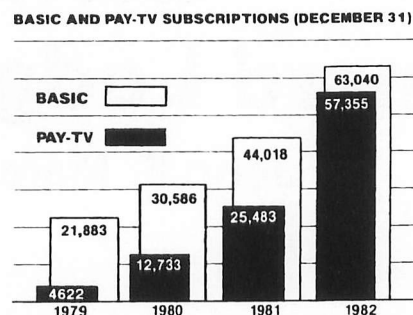

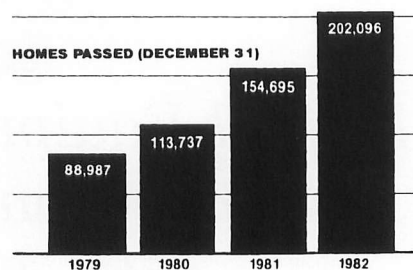

This development is potentially as important as the wiring of America for telephone service ... and the comparison is apt. Today, there are two forms of bi-directional (or two way) communication into the home: telephone and, in some locales, cable television. Most cable television systems being installed today have bi-directional capability which merely requires the addition of appropriate electronics.

The potential applications of cable television are awesome because of the information carrying capacity of coaxial cable. The telephone presently offers one use at a time. Television broadcasters can only offer one "page" - that is, one program - at a time. Cable operators now routinely offer as many as 50 "pages" of programming simultaneously.

Cable systems and their related technologies will produce changes in American society and culture that are beyond our abilities to forecast.

Acton Corporation has focused its efforts on cable television, a business which we expect to be one of the great growth industries of the future.
